

Podcast Script – Project of the Month

Welcome to this sixty second Sugar snippet. My name is Susie Williams. Today we're going to talk about the “Project of the Month” section of SugarForge: what it is, why it’s worth checking out every month, and how you can have your project featured on the site.

For those of you who are new to the world of Sugar, SugarForge.org is the website for developers to post and collaborate on Sugar-related projects. In last week’s podcast we talked about Language Packs, which are posted on SugarForge; there are lots of other types of projects posted on the site, including modules and dashlets to extend the application, connectors to other software, and whole areas of new functionality built on the Sugar platform.

Every month we cull through the newest and most interesting projects to determine a “Project of the Month”. We feature that project on the home page of SugarForge, and also post an interview with the project’s developer. Members of the community get to learn a bit more about the project as well as the people behind the work. The developer gets some free publicity as well as visibility in the community.

Past featured projects include the Sugar Portal for Joomla from Jason Eggers, Spanish Language Pack files from Alberto Serrano, and SuperTimeSheet from our friend Superman in Kazakhstan.

Usually we’re pretty good at spotting the best and brightest rising stars, but if we’ve overlooked your project and you’d like to submit it for consideration for a future Project of the Month, please send an email to sugarforge@sugarcrm.com and we’ll take a look at your project. Who knows... you could be the next Project of the Month star!

And that's your sixty second Sugar snippet. Goodbye!
